! BOTTLES UNDER PRESSURE ! The fermentation process used to create Champagne and sparkling wine creates internal pressures inside the bottle up to 90 pounds per square inch. This internal pressure propels the cork across the room when the bottle is opened.

♥ Fragile. Glass bottles do not tolerate coarse handling without breaking or shattering, and, when paired with the internal pressure on the glass, a broken Champagne or sparkling wine bottle can cause personal injury! Keep cool. Heat not only destroys the Champagne or sparkling wine inside—it also increases the internal pressure in the glass bottle. Please keep the bottle in a climate controlled environment, preferably between 40° to 75°F. Do not freeze. Handle with care. Although we have engraved thousands of Champagne and sparkling wine bottles, and we do it annually, without incident, a few companies' bottles have failed after engraving. Engraving lightly etches the glass, but it may make the bottle less tolerant of coarse handling, jarring, as well as elevated or freezing temperatures!

LIABILITY RELEASE: I am aware of the risks and dangers, as well as the care and handling recommendations, I hereby authorize engraving modifications to my bottle of Champagne or sparkling wine. I understand that my request-ed modifications will likely void any manufacturer, distributor, or retailer warranties. I also hold harmless the engraver, manufacturer, distributor, and retailer for any breakage, damages, or injuries resulting from my requested modifications. If purchased as a gift, I will inform the gift's recipient regarding the risks as well as proper care and handling instructions for the bottle.
